New Book Exposes the Sinister Side of the Internet, from Cyberbullying to Murder

January 14, 2013, Medford, NJ—Information Today, Inc. (ITI) announced the publication of True Crime Online: Shocking Stories of Scamming, Stalking, Murder, and Mayhem by cybercrime expert and victims’ advocate, J. A. Hitchcock. In her 10th book, Hitchcock (Net Crimes & Misdemeanors) journeys into the darkest recesses of the internet to document the activities of online miscreants and criminals, from bullies and stalkers to scam artists, sexual predators, and serial killers.

“From entertainment to education and from shopping to dating, the internet has provided an entirely new virtual world for everyone to enjoy,” Hitchcock notes, but she warns that the online world is also a breeding ground for murderers, kidnappers, child predators, scam artists, terrorists, hackers, and other criminals. “The FBI Internet Crime Complaint Center found that in 2011 a record-setting 314,246 fraud complaints were filed,” according to the author. “That’s a 3.4 percent increase from 2010, with a monetary loss for victims at a staggering estimate of $485.3 million—almost double the number for the previous year.”

In the foreword to True Crime Online, leading advocate for victims of domestic violence Denise Brown explains, “With the internet, predators don’t need to leave their homes anymore to find or harass their targets. They have no fear of physical violence, since they believe that they cannot be physically touched in cyberspace.” Brown says, “The stories in this book are both frightening and real and depict things that can and do happen everyday. They show us what can happen to people just like you and me. People who never thought they would become victims of online crimes.”

True Crime Online features 16 chapters covering a range of shocking cybercrimes, including both highly publicized and lesser-known cases of cyberbullying, sexual predation, robbery, murder, and cannibalism. Readers can access case updates and information on how to stay safe online from the author at www.truecrime-online.com.
